

THE ARTIST SERIES OPPORTUNITY

A CONSUMER PRODUCTS AND LICENSING CASE FOR PFL AND MVP

The merger announced on 30 July 2026 puts boxing and MMA under one banner, behind an MMA debut that drew 12.4 million viewers on Netflix in May. The licensing infrastructure to convert that attention is already in place, with CAA Sports Licensing appointed as exclusive trademark representative and Takedown supplying performance and lifestyle apparel. What sits between the audience and the shelf is a design system: the graphic language, style guide and seasonal creative that turn a fight night into a product drop.

$40M MLB's Tokyo Series in fan gear and cards, carrying Murakami artwork. Fanatics' best selling event on record	15 MIN Most of that Murakami collection gone. Sold out inside the hour, after 100,000 app downloads to reach it	$136.4M WWE consumer products licensing in 2025, up 23 per cent on a design and collaboration led programme	$55.0M UFC consumer products and licensing in 2024, 4 per cent of revenue and down on 2023

01 THE PRECEDENT

UFC ARTIST SERIES

The UFC commissions original artwork for its marquee cards and releases it as Artist Series prints, tees and collectibles, extending into designer art toys with Stancé and illustrator Tracy Tubera. The economics sit in scarcity and price: framed Artist Series prints retail at $199.99, numbered runs land in the low hundreds, and canvas editions pressed onto used Octagon canvas are made in tens. Each card becomes a dated, collectable drop rather than a restock of the primary logo.

02 THE DEMAND

ARTIST LED PRODUCT SELLS

MLB ran the same play at scale. Takashi Murakami artwork across jerseys, hoodies and caps sold out on the Fanatics app in under an hour, most of it inside 15 minutes, after more than 100,000 fans downloaded the app to reach it. The Tokyo Series took $40 million in fan gear and trading cards, the best selling event on Fanatics' record.

Formula 1 shows the pattern holding in apparel. Fashion led collaborations have run to roughly 80 per cent sold through at some retailers, apparel sponsorship spend is up 75 per cent in two years, and other revenue covering licensing, merchandising and hospitality rose 20 per cent to $787 million in 2025.

03 THE HEADROOM

COMBAT SPORTS UNDER TRADES

UFC consumer products and licensing was $55.0 million in 2024, around 4 per cent of UFC revenue and down on the year before. WWE, under the same owner and the same commercial machine, took $136.4 million and grew 23 per cent on a programme built around design, collaboration and repeat drops. ONE Championship has chased the same ground since 2018 with SBTG and Shoyoroll. Combat sports has the appetite. What it lacks is the creative system feeding the licensees.

04 THE STUDIO

PROVEN IN SPORT AND COMBAT

For Fuji we delivered the brand guide and style guide, including fighter led artwork grounded in research such as the Rickson Gracie graphic built from his own fight material. For ESPN we translated broadcast storytelling into a fashion first style guide, reframing a sports broadcaster as a lifestyle brand embedded in the everyday culture of sport. The same work runs through Chelsea, Ferrari, LA28 and the FIA World Endurance Championship, alongside seasonal trend reporting for Scramble and Phalanx.

PROPOSED ROUTE

STAGE 01 BRAND AND STYLE GUIDE One graphic language for the merged business, covering fight kit, fan apparel and the licensee packs CAA already distributes. Vector built for easy re-colouring and territory rollout.	STAGE 02 ARTIST SERIES PILOT Commissioned fighter artwork around one marquee card, released as a limited drop of prints, tees and collectibles. A contained test with a clear read on sell-through.	STAGE 03 SEASONAL LIFESTYLE COLLECTION Trend forecast through to product, two drops a year, built to scale across licensees and territories and to hold shelf space next to streetwear.

Every fight night already produces a poster. The opportunity is to make it something a fan wears home.
